

My experience as a United flight attendant leads me to question if there is any evidence that cell phone usage wouldn't interfere with navigational instruments, not to mention making an already confined cabin environment even more tense and stressful. Further, it would facilitate terrorists' communication for initiating a plan of attack. Finally, in the event of an emergency evacuation, getting passengers' attention would be severely hampered.